The teacher is one of the oldest professions on Earth. Even in Ancient Greece, Egypt and Rome, people, revered for their intelligence and knowledge, became teachers. Consequently, it was considered a great honor to become a disciple of the philosopher to comprehend the secrets of the world. Examples we know from history: the teacher, for instance, of Alexander of Macedon was an Ancient Greek scholar and philosopher Aristotle. Moreover, who know that Alexander would become such a great warrior and king, if not for the lessons of his mentor?

Many people believe that teacher is not a profession, however, they think that it is a vocation. Indeed, that many soul qualities a person who wants to become a teacher should unite in his character. It is firmness, boundless patience, rigor and softness, trust and the ability to be an example in everything, and most importantly- love, love of life, the learning process, and above all, the children. Even Lev Tolstoy noted that a good teacher is someone who unites love for his work and love for his students.

From a young age, we are surrounded by teachers. They reveal to us the secrets of numbers, explain laws of nature, and introduce the masterpiece of world culture. They open doors to us to this amazing world, which is filled with the joy of recognition. Authentic teachers teach us not so much about science, they teach us how to learn, how to find the source of knowledge. They awake craving for the light in us. Exactly these teachers inspire their students.

Many aspects in person's life depend on who will be his teacher. After all, teachers give us not only knowledge of the subject, they teach us about life, they educate in little kid the ability to rejoice and love, hope and believe, intelligent and confident, how to be strong and courageous in their abilities. The Ancient Greek philosopher Plutarch wrote that the disciple is torch that needs to be ignited, and only true teacher can do this.

All the pride of the teacher is in his students. Indeed, that behind the scientists' discoveries, professors achievements, always stand their teachers. We grow up, become adults, and choose our own way, however, in each of us there is always a piece of the soul, presented to us by the teachers. Moreover, it is not an accident that even after many years, people with such warmth remember their teachers.
