

Teacher - a magnificent profession

The teaching profession today is very much in demand. But unfortunately, not everyone understands that teaching is a hard enough and not always well-paid job.

Let's start with the fact that teachers have to deal with children, in the most different and difficult periods of their lives. You might even say that we spend more time in school than we do at home, and teachers become not just teachers, but educators as well. Thanks to them, we know discipline, rules of social behavior, and much more.

But teachers don't just educate, they also teach. Teachers have a heavy burden, they need to provide material on the subject in a way that everyone understands, and preferably from the first time. They sit up all night long with papers, computer, compiling new materials, checking homework, and preparing for the upcoming inspection.

We treat teachers trivial, not giving them much importance. Many people don't think of teachers as great people. Some of them have a story of how there was an evil teacher who screwed everyone over. But, let's be honest, it was probably the teacher who taught you the most.

All teachers are great people, regardless of their subject or course. I think teachers should be treated more politely than we treat them now. Teachers are human beings too, but great ones.

Arthur Shchegolev, 11 A