

A teacher is a good profession

The international day of teachers is getting closer, so I wanted to write an essay about this amazing day.

As people say, school is our second home, and a teacher is like our second mother. I fully support that statement. Growing up, most of the time, we are at school, raised by caring teaching staff, and learning something new every day.

It is one of the most difficult and hard jobs, in my opinion. Teachers teach us everything, passing on knowledge for generations. Without them, we simply would not have those important jobs such as doctors, scientists, and many more essential ones. Pedagogues work hard even with the noisiest and most complicated students. And it can really affect teachers' mental health, so we undoubtedly need to treat them properly, without arguing, or saying something inappropriate. But there is also a good side. A class can become literally best friend with the teacher. However, a pedagogue needs to be understanding and have a good relationship with a class. From my own experience, I can say that studying will become more interesting due to relationships with teachers.

In conclusion, I must say, that this job takes a lot of effort, and it is also the most essential profession in the whole world. And next time when you go to school, just say a simple "have a nice day" to your teacher. I am sure, it would make his/her day.

Sofia Utyeva, 9 V